Pal-Think - A Palestinian Gaza-based Think and Do Tank

Pal-Think concludes project "Public Policy Lab and Strategic Thinking"

In partnership with the "Project on Middle East Democracy Project - POMED", Pal-think has organized a closing conference in conclusion of project "Public Policy Laboratory and Strategic Thinking". Ten policy papers, dealing with important societal issues such as the electricity problem, solid waste management, and economic violence against women, were discussed as part of Pal-think's efforts in localizing community development and empowering youth research...more

Session 2: Community Issues from the Perspective of Palestinian Youth

The findings stated that graduates need more courses and workshops to qualify them to compete in the global freelance market, and that there's a negligence from the majority of higher education institutes towards freelancing despite the exploding unemployment rates...more

"Youth Participate": Graduates and Freelancing

Through a survey, Palestinian youths were asked about their experiences with different freelancing websites. Each had a different opinion on the matter. Indeed, some were capable of gaining money whereas others were exposed to fraud...more

Session 1: Community Issues from the Perspective of Palestinian Youth

Taghreed Najm and Heba Abubakra discussed a crisis of dialogue the Palestinian youth suffers, mainly caused by the Palestinian internal division. They stressed the importance of utilizing the civil society and educational institutes in instilling a culture of debate and dialogue, as well as mobilizing social media for conflict resolution among the youth...more

"Youth Participate": Gaza Youth Abscond the City by the Boats of Death

"What pushes youth to take the risk towards illegally immigrating is the lack of awareness about the suffering the refugees face in the hosting countries that the immigrants aspire to reside in, imagining a rosy life to be ahead of them, but a rough one, indeed." Qouta added...more

Accommodating the Outcomes of Media Education with the Labor Market's Requirement

"Faculties of media are still focused on theoretical lecturing rather than skill-based training; which creates a shock felt by the graduates of that faculty upon their interaction with the market. He described college courses as sterile and in need to be reconsidered and replaced by more modernized courses that take into consideration professional and practical updates."...more
